HOPELESSLY BATTERED FRANCE NOW SANCTIONS HONORABLE PEACE; TASK OF ENDING SLAUGHTER FALLS TO PETAIN

New Premier Unhesitatingly Accepts Sad Mission for Country Battered by Overwhelming Foe—Spanish Ambassador Reportedly Named Intermediary—German Foreign Office Refuses To Answer Questions

(By International News Service)

BORDEAUX, France, June 17—Hopelessly battered by an overwhelming foe, the Republic of France sanctioned an honorable peace today.

The task of putting an end to the slaughter that has drenched half of France in blood fell to Marshal Petain.

The new Premier of France unhesitatingly accepted his sad mission. The Spanish Ambassador to France, Jose De La Querica, was reported named as intermediary to communicate Hitler's details to Marshal Petain.

BERLIN, June 17 — France may request an armistice through some mutual country within 24 hours, it was reported without confirmation today.

BERLIN, June 17—The German Foreign Office this afternoon refused to answer questions regarding the possibility of peace negotiations with France or to discuss reports that France has utterly capitulated.

LONDON, June 17—Great Britain today accepted as tragic but inevitable the decision of Marshal Petain of France to sue for peace. Every indication pointed to the decision of this country to fight on alone, but authorities said that the status of France's navy would be a question of major importance to Britain's decision. The government set about preparing a formal statement of the British attitude.

An official British Broadcasting Company announcer read an address attributed to Marshal Petain of France announcing that "the battle has had to cease." The text follows:

"French men and women:

"I have assumed leadership of the Government of France.

"I have been thinking of those who have been fighting true to their old military traditions against an enemy of huge numerical strength.

"I was thinking of those old combatants, some I commanded during the last war. At the moment I am thinking of the unforgettable refugees driven from their homes by the war.

"It is with a heavy heart that I tell you today that we must stop the fight. The battle has had to cease during the night.

"I sent a message to the enemy yes-

How Did The July 4th Celebration Start?

One year ago two men, Anthony Russo and Linford J. Jones, conceived the idea of having some sort of a celebration on Independence Day. They called in a newspaper representative and tentative plans were discussed. The idea was talked over with others who became enthused. A meeting was called and men and women in all walks of life joined in the project. The first celebration was held July 4, 1939. Its success speaks for itself. A substantial sum remained in the treasury from the first year and this forms the nucleus of a fund for this year's affair.

How the milk dollars are distributed was explained to the Rotary Club of Doylestown, Wednesday evening, by A. B. Miller, a representative of a well-known dairy, who illustrated his discussion with pictures.

The speaker explained that only a small part of the milk is sold for drinking purposes, that a great deal of it must be sold for products made from milk, like butter, cheese, ice cream and so on. One illustration was that it takes 10½ quarts of milk to make a pound of butter and that if the price charged for milk used for customer consumer were charged for it the price of butter would be around 70 cents a pound—and the consumption of butter would be greatly reduced.

The Economy Milestone

Washington, June 15.

THE agreement in the Finance Committee upon Senator Byrd's proposal to cut ten per cent., or approximately $500,000,000, from the gross governmental appropriations, exclusive of those for national defense, practically insures its adoption. This is a milestone. It is the first real step toward economy since the summer of 1933, when Mr. Roosevelt, suddenly abandoning the Democratic platform, launched his first spending program, thereby nullifying the reductions which he had so magnificently achieved in the first six months of his first administration.

SINCE that time he has spent $23,000,000,000 more than we have taken in. Deficits have piled on $22,000,000,000 more than we have deficits until the total debt, without the defence billions, has broken through the $45,000,000,000 limit set by Congress and which no one dreamed we would reach. When it is considered how little we have to show for this unprecedented outpouring of public funds, it is a fantastic and incredible story. What makes it almost grotesque is that in all these seven years the President has made not a single move in the direction of retrenchment. On the contrary, he has successfully resisted every effort of Congress to cut down, and in the last two years has even ceased to mention economy in his messages or speeches.

THE net result is that control over the Federal finances has been lost; expenses have literally run wild and the waste has brought the country close to the brink of bankruptcy. That with the nation's finances in so shocking a condition the President could urge the appropriation of two billions for defense without coupling his request with recommendation for increas-

COMPULSORY TRAINING

Americans are so nimble-minded that they can jump in a few weeks from an isolationist policy which frowned on any increase in national defense to contemplation of some form of compulsory military service for young men, in the United States.

If it was a big step to sanctioning sale of old planes and guns to the Allies, and another to authorizing building up the standing Army to 400,000 men, the suggestion of requiring every boy to spend a year, more or less, in military training is nothing short of revolutionary.

Americans have looked with disapproval and a certain condescension on nations which have adopted compulsory service. In ordinary times, the whole idea is repellent to a nation that asks only the right to live at peace with itself and with its neighbors.

But now that most Americans think they understand the evil nature of the force that has been let loose in the world, this project appeals to the streak of Yankee common sense in them. This nation is unlikely to become so enamored with its military might that it shall want to use it either aggressively or futilely.

The project is still in the discussion stage ,and not too serious discussion; but the fact that it is being discussed at all is significant of the change that has taken place in American habits of thinking. If the worst fears for Europe are realized, not only a compulsory training period but also universal service under a draft law may become necessary.

For the time being, however, it is generally believed that volunteer enlistments will strengthen the Army, Navy and Air Services sufficiently to meet the emergency.

CAN THEY GET STARTED?

Maybe Premier Mitchell Hepburn of Ontario is unduly perturbed about Nazi and Fascist sympathizers in the United States, "who are organized, armed and waiting only for orders from across the Atlantic to invade Canada."

Most Americans do not think totalitarian sympathizers could get to first base in an invasion of Canada. In the first place, the police on this side wouldn't let them get started; and, if a few should trickle across the border, Canada certainly would know how to handle them. Indeed, there might be few whole Nazi or Fascist heads on either side of the frontier a few hours after the beginning of the invasion.

But Mr. Hepburn's fears cannot be laughed off too lightly. Many can remember World War days when Von Papen and his fellow-conspirators, German and pseudo-American, were plotting the bombing of the Welland Canal—which didn't come off—and similar acts of war against Canada. And recently published revelations of a professed counter-spy contain purported evidence of Von Papen's preparations to arm thousands of German sympathizers in the United States for invasion of Canada.

The Nazis are as impudent and lawless as Von Papen in their anti-Canadian—and anti-American activities on United States soil. So perhaps it would be well for the authorities to do a bit of checking up on this side of the border to make sure that those "invaders" never get started. It isn't easy to start an invasion from a jail.

THE STORY OF A DUEL

By DORON GREEN

The Fountain House (Delaware House), Radcliffe and Mill streets is ablaze with light. The strains of the Blue Danube and other rhythmic waltzes float through the windows into the street. Gayly dressed eighteenth century belles with their escorts are going in and out. Every little while a lumbering stage coach arrives at the stables across the street and for a few minutes all is bustle and excitement until a change of horses is made and the coach starts upon its journey again.

The occasion is a military ball given by the Tenth Regiment of the United States Army which for several months has been encamped upon a piece of land just above the Hollow Creek. Captain Sharp, who is in charge of one of the companies, is a young man stately in appearance with a kindly face and of unusual popularity with the fair sex.

The Quartermaster of the regiment named Johnson, is a native of Virginia with the polish of a Southern gentleman. He is somewhat retiring in his disposition and although thought well of by the ladies is unsusceptible to their wiles and schemes.

A few years before this event a man named McElroy built the Cross Keys Hotel on the west side of Radcliffe street above Market. This hotel was built as a competitor of the Fountain House for the trade incident to the growing popularity of the Bath Springs, and being a newer building excelled in all its appointments and conveniences. Mr. McElroy, the owner, was the father of an attractive and comely daughter who assisted him in the operation of the hotel. Being unusually talented, and with a lovely disposition, she was eagerly sought after by all the gallant young beaux in the neighborhood.

On the night of the military ball she was the guest of Captain Sharp, who was a boarder at the Cross Keys Hotel. During the evening Quartermaster Johnson, noticing that she was sitting alone, requested the pleasure of the dance, which she accepted graciously. At the conclusion as the Captain did not put in his appearance Johnson asked for another dance. Later in the evening when the opportunity occurred he obtained a third dance. Captain Sharp was furious. When he returned home with Miss McElroy he retired to his room immediately. Insane jealousy had gotten a firm grip upon him. The next morning he was still in an ugly mood when he entered the dining room and refused to notice Miss McElroy.

"You dirty skunk," he said. "What do you mean by butting into my love affairs and robbing me of three dances with the girl I expect to marry?"

The Quartermaster remained calm, and tried to convince the Captain that he had no further intentions than simply dancing with Miss McElroy. He said he realized that the Captain was keeping company with the young lady and that he had no desire to butt in or interfere.

The Quartermaster's calm manner and complete control of his feelings exasperated the Captain still more. Removing his glove he struck the Quartermaster a stinging blow across the face.

Still holding himself in check the Quartermaster expostulated with Captain Sharp and tried to make him see how foolish it would be to fight a duel over such a trifling offence. He suggested that the matter be dropped until the morrow when perhaps the Captain's anger would have subsided and an amicable conclusion could be reached.

Captain Sharp refused to listen to reason and said: "My seconds will wait upon yours at two o'clock this afternoon and make arrangements for the meeting."

Accordingly the seconds met at the appointed time and arrangements were made to fight with pistols, the duel to take place at sunrise the next morning. Quartermaster Johnson was ill at ease. Coming from the South he had been trained in chivalry. Ever since his boyhood he had been drilled in the use of fire-arms particularly pistols, against that possible day when his southern chivalry would demand satisfaction. Now that the time had come he shuddered to think that his superior marksmanship might result in the killing of his friend.

The next morning when Sharp came down early to breakfast, Miss McElroy suspected that something was wrong. She begged him not to do anything rash. He assured her he would return for dinner at the usual time.

When Sharp arrived at the encampment all was in readiness. The principals were placed back to back, the signal given to take the usual paces forward, then turn and shoot. For some reason either intentionally or accidentally Sharp's pistol was fired prematurely. Having done no damage the Quartermaster magnanimously fired his pistol in the air and stated that if Captain Sharp were willing the affair could still be settled amicably. Sharp insisted on another trial when he was mortally wounded. He was placed in a carriage but died before reaching the hotel.

Quartermaster Johnson was terribly upset. He had tried every manly way to prevent the duel, but at last in self defense was obliged to kill his adversary. He left immediately for his home in Virginia.

He and Miss McElroy never met again. The affair was so shocking to her, combined with the thought that she had unintentionally been the cause, that she was prostrated for weeks. When she recovered all her old vivacity and youthful enthusiasm were gone. Pleasures that once gave her enjoyment were now dull and insipid. She no longer craved the company of the younger set, but preferred to be alone. At first her friends tried to break down her antipathy to pleasure, but being unsuccessful at last gave up in despair. And so the years passed slowly until at last old age crept quietly on, and one morning it was found that during the night her crushed and bruised spirit had passed into the beyond.

May we not hope that Captain Sharp having atoned for his sin, and with a heart torn with remorse over the injury which his jealousy had caused, was present to greet her as she passed into that mysterious eternity, and that together they were able to piece together the lives that were so tragically cut asunder, and hand in hand enter into that new existence with the feeling, that in their new environment where justice ruled, they might find compensation for the terrible mistake which had made a wreck of their earthly lives.

Quartermaster Johnson, like Miss McElroy, never married. The tragedy weighed heavily upon him and blighted his life. When the War of 1812 began he enlisted and was mortally wounded while fighting under General Winfield Scott at the Battle of Lundy's Lane.

Miss McElroy was buried in the St. James' Churchyard, under the trees on the west side of the church. A simple tombstone marks her burial place. Here in this quiet, shady nook lies the remains of a once beautiful and cultured maiden whose life was blighted by a terrible tragedy of which she was the innocent cause; a tragedy that took the life of another, and for a third left nothing but an unhappy future tortured by self-reproach and remorse.

"TITAN TOWER" by JAMES G. CHESNUTT

CHAPTER TWENTY-NINE

When Linda arrived at her home that evening after work, Mickey was playing in his room and Mrs. Blauer was sewing in the kitchen. Linda thought it strange that the neighbor woman acted so innocently guilty, like a small boy caught in the jam cupboard. Mrs. Blauer, finding some excuse, hastily left.

A few minutes later, when she read the note, Linda understood Mrs. Blauer's strange conduct.

"Mickey," Linda said to her son. "What's that you have in your hand?"

She crouched and tried to take from Mickey the small black book which he was eagerly scanning with a wise expression, as though he could read, and understand, the writing in it.

"Don't!" he screamed sharply, as she sought to take the book from him. "It's Mickey's—Steve gave it to me!"

Linda, who could read the writing but couldn't understand, saw that Mickey had spoken the truth.

"Mickey Morton," followed by Linda's address.

On the next page there was the inked record of a single deposit. It read: "$2,000."

Linda, half way out the back door to get Mrs. Blauer and extract the secret from her, saw the note on the kitchen table. With trembling hands, she opened it and read—as far as she could.

"Linda:" it began, "Please don't try to give it back. It's Mickey's, not yours.

"It's pretty small ammunition against the Mortons' big guns, but it will help him fight to keep someone that it's pretty tough to lose.

"Besides, I won't need the money, really. I'm going up to run the ranch—and I'll be growing the stuff on trees pretty soon.

"The reason my handwriting's so good is that Mrs. Blauer wrote this for me—I never could write, even without blankets on my hands . . ."

That was as far as Linda could read.

Through the tears welling in her eyes, she saw something that she had been blind to only too long. She saw something which her heart had been trying to tell her ever since a sunny morning on the roof of Titan Tower when a fresh young "heart specialist" in a mechanic's jumper first barged into her life—and Mickey's.

And Linda resolved then, in all humility, to go to Steve and to tell him how blind she had been.

Linda would have gone to Steve right away—had she known where to find him. When she did learn the whereabouts of Aunt Cynthia's ranch, it was too late. Something—something terrible and unforeseen—was to intervene. Something which would help the Bradley Mortons in their custody fight.

On Tuesday, the Bradley Mortons had arrived from Chicago, and had taken a suite at a fashionable hotel. On Tuesday night, Janice Marberry . . . knowing through Jo that the Mortons had conferred with Jack Blaine and Lawson, his employer . . . sought out Jack.

Now was the time to see Jack, Janice reasoned; now was the time to learn whether he had heeded her pleas, as the text of his letter to Jo's employer had indicated; now was the time to learn, from Jack's own lips—whether he was going through with the fight to take Linda's boy from her. NOW!

A telephone call to Jack's home brought the reply: "He's at Titan Tower. He'll be there late. He said he was working on an important case . . ."

"At the office?" Janice asked.

"No, in Mr. Blaine's penthouse."

Janice, however, didn't call the number. Donning a hat and her light tweed coat—the one with the patch pockets of beaver, which Linda had worn at Lake Tahoe—she took a quick glance in the mirror and then called a taxi.

When Janice left the house, she did not notice the little man lounging beside a tree at the curb, a man whose dark clothing, black suit and hat, seemed to merge with the gloom about him. Nor did she notice that the man climbed into a car and followed her taxi.

When Janice's taxi pulled to a stop in front of Titan Tower, the car of the man-in-black was not far behind. Janice, as she dashed into the building, didn't notice that she was being followed. Nor did she know that this shadow was accompanied by another man, who carried a square black box and a small handbag.

Janice couldn't see either, as she walked up to the elevator with as much nonchalance as she could command under the circumstances, that the shadow withdrew from his pocket a folded newspaper clipping and showed it to his companion.

The clipping was a reproduction of the photograph of Linda taken at Lake Tahoe; Linda wearing Janice's distinctive coat—the same coat which Janice herself now wore.

"Jan!" he exclaimed. "What in the world . . . How did you find me here?"

"Don't you . . ." Janice said, and she bit her lip as her eyes searched his face for the answer she yearned, "don't you want to see me, Jack?"

"Darling," he answered, "Please don't . . . you know I do—always."

When they were comfortably seated by the fireplace, Janice tried to turn the conversation toward the reason for her unexpected call.

"I don't want to butt into your business . . . again, Jack," she began, "but is it true that the Mortons are going to drop the case? Oh, I HOPE so; I hope so, so much . . ."

Jack looked at her a long time before answering.

"Do we have to talk about that tonight, Jan?" he asked, and his arm slid down to encircle her shoulders. "About other folks' lives, I mean, when we have our own lives—when we have us?"

The warmth from the fire was cozy, the lights were low and the stars, peeking in the vaulted penthouse window from a moonless sky, were very bright. But Janice tried again.

"It IS my life, Jack," she said, sitting up. "If anything happens to Linda, if she loses her boy, it would just kill me!"

Jack stood up and walked about, lost in thought . . .

"Look, dear," he said, softly, "I know. I've given it a lot of thought, but let's talk it over later. Right now we have a lot of remembering to do. Of us—of nights by the fire like this . . ."

When the photographer's flash bulb was ignited, Janice felt it, rather than saw it. She couldn't have covered up her face in time to beat the flash—but her face already was covered, because Janice's arm was in front of her face and the reason it was there was because Janice was crying.

Yet in that flash everything stood revealed to Janice—everything. As clearly as the bright flare illumined the penthouse surroundings did that other inner flash, which came to Janice, show a course for Janice to take—a course she must take.

Jack Blaine, attorney for the Mortons, was going through with his fight against Linda. And now she, Janice herself, had given the Mortons some pictorial evidence for that court battle.

That was why the Mortons' hirelings, who had scuttled below after obtaining the picture, had taken it! That was why they had watched and waited. She wasn't Janice to them —she was Linda!

Their picture would show the coat that Linda had worn. Janice's picture—a picture of a girl in a distinctive coat, her face covered—would be Linda's picture to the public and maybe the court, too!!

Thus Janice, who loved Linda so sincerely, would be the innocent instrument responsible for handing Mickey over to the Mortons.

Janice's course became clear to her. She must stop them from producing that picture. She MUST!

Immediately before her lay a fork in that clearly-defined course—two ways to accomplish the same end, the end that must be achieved.

The first was to follow immediately after the Morton minions, the photographer and the shadow, to catch them before they sped away, and to convince them, then and there, that she was NOT Linda. The second . . .

Janice, a heartbroken girl with little for which to live, was strangely fascinated by the prospect which that second fork held for her. Strangely and morbidly gripped by the way it beckoned. In this second solution was a definite, irrevocable answer, no loose ends . . .

Tables, Chairs, Garden Baskets On Wheels

Tables on wheels, chairs on wheels, garden baskets on wheels speak of the inventiveness of man to save himself labor.

The tea wagon for instance is useful in the house but it's nothing compared to its agility and marathon runs when its gets outdoors. It can go anywhere in the garden to bring anything from iced drinks to a simple supper. And with it big comfortable chairs can be wheeled along, even a metal or bamboo chaise lounge, to the most delectable spot at that particular moment—where the sun is just right or the breeze is blowing.

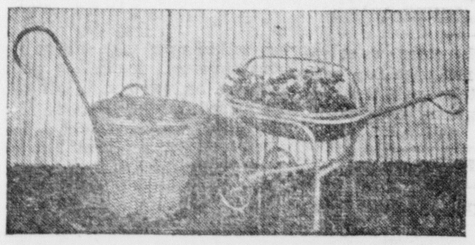

HELEN KOUES
Director of Good Housekeeping Studio

Before you buy heavy chairs, no matter how comfortable, see what the family on wheels can give you. The big comfortable wooden Adirondack chairs (that may be left out in the rain) have their hind legs on rubber wheels and may be moved much as you would a wheel barrow. Some of the chaise longes can be handled just this way, and though strong, are lightly constructed and easy to move. There is variety in tables to suit all sorts of needs—that is the small table, from regular tea wagons to circular and rectangular affairs, especially designed for "what it takes". Of course these wheels add a little to the cost, but it's wise to consider porch and garden furniture as a permanent investment and get a good quality. With proper care in the summer, a good cleaning in the autumn before they go into winter quarters and a fresh coat of paint or shellac in the spring, they will last for years. Where there is metal and of course, the wheels themselves, they must be kept dry and where necessary oiled. Another excellent feature of the wheel family is that with reasonable care they do not dig up or mar the grass—a fact which is sure to appeal to the garden lover and the man of the family if he cuts the grass.

Make your gardening easy with lightweight equipment

And speaking of gardens here are two handy baskets. The garden scrap basket with the man-like cane is a type which has been a joy to me for years. It may sit right by you in weeding ready to catch the weeds and dead flowers you are pulling out and cutting off.

The other basket is a bit of an extravagance, but it's one of those joyous extravagances we want to indulge in, or perhaps get given to us. It's a glorified wheel barrow, with a basket tray which is wonderful for carrying plants to be transplanted, though its real function is to wheel cut flowers to the house where the tray may be lifted out, easily carried to where they are to be put in water.

Look for all the useful and attractive summer furniture and gadgets on wheels!

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

Sombreros off to Jane Withers and Gene Autry and a 24-gun salute with "six-shooters" to 20th Century-Fox for bringing these incomparable stars together in "Shooting High," the current offering at the Grand Theatre.

Together Jane and Gene race through the film shooting, riding, singing and getting laughs to score a new high in entertainment. Jane uses all her mischievous charm to turn in the finest performance of her career, while Gene never was better. His voice is still tops and he still knows how to get everything that can be gotten out of a song.

RITZ THEATRE

When the two greatest dancers of the contemporary stage and screen get together in a single production, it's news. Such news is verified in "Broadway Melody of 1940," now at the Ritz Theatre.

Spectacular in all of its departments, these two stars are given a suitable send-off for their first co-starring feature. Nine dances, ranging in type from tap to ballet, six Cole Porter song hits, gigantic sets, a notable cast, Norman Taurog as director, all add up to the prediction that "Broadway Melody of 1940" is due to take its place as the year's most entertaining and eye-filling film.

BRISTOL THEATRE

A saga of the sagebrush that's more wacky than wild galloped happily into the Bristol Theatre last night to reveal Jack Benny, the kilocycle kid, as the only cowboy in the world with a valet —and the valet none other than the inimitable Rochester. The title of this lyrical rodeo of fun is "Buck Benny Rides Again."

Practically the entire crew of Benny's famous radio program have turned up for his adventures among the dude ranches and the over-stuffed cactus. Andy Devine, Phil Harris, Dennis Day are all present and excellent in their specialties. While Ellen Drew, Virgina Dale, Lillian Cornell and the Abbott Dancers ably and appealingly represent the feminine contingent.

"FARMERS" SCORE TWO WINS OVER PAST WEEK-END

SCORE ENDS AT 8 TO 4

In Best Pitching Duel of The Season Landreth Downs Port Richmond

Saturday afternoon Landreth's Seeds defeated Raphael of the Philadelphia City League 8 to 4 in a rather interesting game.

The "Farmers" had a very patched-up team. Billy Leigh helped Manager Landreth out by doing the catching, and did an excellent job, throwing out the only two runners who tried to steal second. Claude Lodge moved in from right field to second base. Miksis came in from left to play short, and Al Carey played center while Mike Palowez did a good job in right. Jerry Brucker went to the mound the second time within three days and Raphael could do nothing with him in the pinches.

The features were the fine double play combination of Miksis and Lodge and the outfielding of Friel, who made three fine catches for the visitors.

The locals won the game in the seventh inning with one of their famous batting rallies featured by Claude Lodge's home run over the right field fence.

In the best pitching duel of the current season Landreth Seeds defeated "Jocko" Collins' Port Richmond team of the Phila. League yesterday afternoon at Landreth Park, 1-0.

Al Carey was on the mound for the Farmers and was opposed by youthful Bob McDonald for the visitors. Carey allowed but five scattered hits and struck out four while McDonald gave up six — one a double by Broderick — and fanned six.

Landreth's squeezed over the lone run in the second inning. Rossi passed to first on balls, pilfered second, and after Broderick and Griggs struck out, scored when Carey's hard smash was fielded by Screy who made a poor toss to McDonald who ran to cover the bag.

Eddie Liberatore's catch of Schrey's line drive in the opening inning doubling Lorenc off first base after he had opened with a single. Johnnie Miksis' shoestring catch of Schrey's drive in the third inning, and Claude Lodge's running catch of Hayward's long drive in the ninth inning, ending the game, were the fielding features.

Thursday evening at 6.15 Landreth's will play East Germantown at Landreth Ball Park and on Saturday at 3 p. m. Riegel Ridge, North Jersey champions.

Ludwig was the fielding star for Bristol with two very good catches of fly balls. Rotondo's pitching was good having eight strike-outs and only allowing two bases on balls.

Doylestown scored in the sixth inning when Flosdorf walked and Combs hit a home run to deep center field. Bristol will play Perkasie on Wednesday night at Landreth Ball Park, game starting at 6.30.

NALON ROARS OVER 100-MILE COURSE TO AN EASY FINISH

40,000 ATTEND RACES

"Duke" Finishes More Than Four Laps Ahead of Ted Horn, California

LANGHORNE, June 17—Duke Nalon piloted his Weirick special to victory in the 100-mile race at Langhorne Speedway, yesterday afternoon. The speed carnival at the local automobile oval was witnessed by 40,000 spectators, the largest crowd ever to assemble here for a race.

Nalon roared over the course in the time of one hour, four minutes and 47.56 seconds, the fastest time ever chalked up for that distance locally.

The winner finished more than four laps ahead of Ted Horn, Los Angeles, who piloted his Riverside-Offenhauser into second place.

Third place went to Otis Stine, of York, in a Hoff's Hall special. Stine finished some two miles behind Horn.

After going into a huddle for a half hour, the A. A. A. officials finally announced Bobby Hall, Paterson, N. J., in a Peters special, had been awarded fourth place. Fifth went to Ora Bean, local youth, in a Hall special.

The race was the most thrilling speed event held at Langhorne in recent years. For 60 miles it developed the sensational and close battle between Nalon and Tony Willman that kept the huge crowd on edge. Willman passed out on his sixtieth mile with a broken clutch after having gone to the pits at the 48-mile mark for tire change.

Willman, Milwaukee veteran who drove an Offenhauser, had the fastest car on the track, but all of his luck was bad. He was leading Nalon by a half lap at 48 miles when he blew his right front tire immediately in front of the grandstand.

Tony held his disabled car on the track and kept it moving at a fast pace, until he had circled the track and then went to the pits. His crew put on a new wheel in 16 seconds, but meanwhil Nalon had assumed the lead and was three-quarters of a lap ahead of Willman when the latter commenced to roll once.

Over the next 12 miles, Willman drove like a maniac and at 58 miles pulled up with Nalon on the back stretch.

There was a tremendous roar from the 40,000 fans as the daring Willman once more went into the lead going around the north turn. But it was a roar that became a roar of sadness when the plucky pilot slowed down and then drove to the inner rail where he came to a stop shortly after passing the grandstand. His trouble was a broken clutch.

Thereafter it was all Nalon, and Duke had the race to himself over the last 40 miles. With victory in his grasp Nalon drove skillfully and carefully.

LARRY LANE AND HARVEY MASSEY TO EXCHANGE BLOWS

Fine Supporting Card is Outlined For Matches Here Tonight

MANGINI AND RAUCH

Pat Mangini Expected To Give Rauch Plenty Of Trouble

Match-maker Jimmy Reilly and Promotor Cliff Smith has arranged a wonderful supporting card to the wind-up bout between Larry Lane and Harvey Massey for tonight's show at the St. Ann's Arena, Wood and Franklin streets. First bout is scheduled to go on at 8.45 o'clock sharp.

For the semi-windup of six rounds, Matchmaker Smith has booked up Charlie Rauch, Trenton boy, against the unique fighting fool, Wild Man Pat Mangini. Known as the boy with the baseball punch, Mangini is expected to give Rauch plenty of trouble.

Mangini, who is a protege of Charlie Daggert, appeared here several times last year and always pleased the fans with his style of boxing, especially when he would wind up like a baseball pitcher and go through the same motions of throwing a ball, instead it is a hard punch which he throws.

Rauch appeared in the semi-windup last week and made short work of his foe, stopping him in the first round.

In the second semi-windup of six rounds, that former Bristolian, Vince Delia, is matched to fight Jack Zaroff, Philadelphia. Vince is out to convince the fans that his ambi-dextrous style of fighting is better than the southpaw method he used in amateurs while fighting under the Purple and Gold colors of the St. Ann's Athletic Association.

Always a crowd pleaser, Freddie Budassi, Trenton, is matched with Nate Carroll, Philadelphia, in one of the fours. Budassi needs no introduction to the local fans who will be pulling for him to throw his knockout punch which he exhibited several times in the local ring.

Rene Pasculli, Trenton, fights Charles Collins, Philadelphia, in the second four-round bout while in the opener, Eddie Brown, New Hope, a former amateur, who fought for St. Ann's will meet Joe Thomas, Philadelphia.

The Great Game of Politics

ed taxes and reduced costs just does not make sense. Yet, that is exactly what he did. Congress, backed by public sentiment, has forced him to support the pending tax bill, but the clear record proves that he neither recommended, conceived, nor approved the enactment of any tax bill at this session.

—o—

HIS plan was to borrow the money and put off the question of payment until after the election. It was a shocking idea and certainly it is not his fault that the nation has not been pushed over the brink. Congress has put on the brakes and forced him to shift his position. For the past ten days the Administration support has been given a tax bill, concededly inadequate, but still a tax bill. That's the Roosevelt record on the taxation phase of the defense program. He literally was prodded into acquiescense. But his record on retrenchment is even more extraordinary. On that he simply had to be dragged.

—o—

UNTIL two weeks ago not so much as a hint of cutting expenses to help the nation stand the additional strain about to be imposed had come from him. After Senator Byrd's announcement of his purpose to ask for a ten per cent. reduction had been widely commended in and out of Congress, Mr. Roosevelt asserted at a press conference that he already had begun a survey to see if a ten per cent. cut would be feasible. Not even the New Dealers took that seriously. It was recognized for what it was—a disingenuous effort to blanket Senator Byrd in the same way he tried to blanket him three years ago on the reorganization issue.

ITS only effect was to stimulate Senator Byrd's efforts and to make it more clear that the Administration was in opposition. Public sentiment in favor of the Byrd proposal manifested itself in many ways. Circumstances made opposition to it inexcusable. To enter upon such a program as proposed without cutting expenditures was too clearly absurd. Eventually the Administration yielded. When Senator Harrison, chairman of the Finance Committee, agreed to the form of the Byrd amendment, and the Budget Director agreed that it was a "workable" proposal, its passage was assured.

—o—

OF course, it is a great victory for Senator Byrd, who has unsuccessfully and against great odds fought for economy since the spending began. But it is also a victory for the people. Had Congress blindly followed the President's lead, or acquiesced in his lack of leadership, there would be neither taxes nor retrenchment—just wholesale borrowing and wholesale spending. Senator Byrd has rescued the country — temporarily at least — from an extremely perilous position and he had to do it against the weight of the President. It is amazing that a man with the capacity for expressing his views on foreign affairs as superbly as Mr. Roosevelt did in his Charlottesville speech should be so complete a financial irresponsible and so wholly lack the executive ability to handle the tremendous tasks intrusted to him.

NO wonder those who know these Rooseveltian deficiencies are disturbed at the idea of his personal management of the big job of national defense. No wonder the demand for Congress to stay in session, despite his expressed wish for adjournment, has grown. Of course, as Senator Byrd has explained—this ten per cent. cut is only the first cut. Other reductions—in salaries, etc.—will have to come at the next session. And more taxes will have to be levied. But Mr. Roosevelt will not make the cuts nor impose the taxes. Everything in his record negatives the idea. Action in those directions will come from others, not from him. This is the first time we have ever had a complete financial irresponsible in the White House. Nothing could be more dangerous at this stage.
